RHP MECHANICAL SYSTEMS RANKS AMONG TOP SPECIALTY CONTRACTORS IN SOUTHWEST CONTRACTOR MAGAZINE

RENO, Nev. (Sept. 29, 2008) – RHP Mechanical Systems is among the Southwest region's top specialty contractors according to Southwest Contractor, a commercial construction industry publication's annual survey of leading subcontractors. The survey results, released in August 2008, ranks subcontractors based on total revenue generated from work completed in 2007. RHP ranks 26th among 192 specialty contractors across Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico, up nine spots from 2006, and 8th among Nevada subcontractors.

RHP reported $63 million in revenues for 2007, contributing to the $6.6 billion in total revenues for all three states, each of which saw an increase. Subcontractor revenue totals in Nevada saw a sizable jump to $2.22 billion, 200 percent more revenue than five years earlier.

"Last year was a strong period for us and the mechanical specialty industry in general," said Steve Scolari, president/CEO of RHP Mechanical Systems. "It's exciting to see us jump so many spots and we look forward to doing it again thanks to the successful year we've had so far in 2008."

Southwest Contractor has been serving the commercial construction industry in Arizona, Nevada and New Mexico for more than 62 years. The magazine provides timely news on projects, people and events that affect the building and highway/heavy segments of the market.

RHP Mechanical Systems specializes in HVAC, plumbing, and mechanical systems ranging from home heating and air conditioners to complex industrial projects.
